EDUCATING WORKERS TO THE DANGER OF DEHYDRATION

- DECLINE IN PRODUCTIVITY
Mild dehydration, loss of 2% body mass or more can cause a decrease in performance of up to 50%. Symptoms create dangerous working environments.
- HEAT INJURY OR ILLNESS
Heat injury or illness can take hold if you don't drink enough while you're active and perspiring heavily. Injuries and illnesses range from mild heat cramps to heat exhaustion and life-threatening heatstroke.
- URINARY AND KIDNEY PROBLEMS
Urinary and kidney issues can arise after repeated or prolonged periods of dehydration. Common issues include urinary tract infections, kidney stones, and kidney failure.
- HYPOVOLEMIC SHOCK
One of the most serious and life-threatening complications arising from dehydration is hypovolemic shock, or low blood volume shock. It happens when you lose more than 20% of your blood or fluid supply, which prevents the heart from pumping enough blood to keep the body running.
- SEIZURE AND LOSS OF CONSCIOUSNESS
It can lead to organ failure and requires immediate emergency medical attention.
- DECREASED COGNITIVE AND MOTOR SKILLS
Dehydration reduces concentration and reaction time, resulting in decreased cognitive and motor skills. Studies show that it only takes 2 percent dehydration to cause impaired performance in tasks that require attention, motor, and memory skills.
